

Sent: August 22, 2008

Subject: Constitution Day Resources

---

We hope this finds you well and that you found some R&R this summer.

With the start of the academic year upon us, we want to share a set of resources we developed to assist faculty and staff in planning programs and events associated with Constitution Day. As you are probably aware, colleges and universities that receive federal funding are required to provide opportunities to learn about the U.S. Constitution, in and around Constitution Day (Sept. 17).

We developed three resources:

- a "guide to the guides" that explores our favorite pocket guides to the U.S. Constitution
- links to key national organizations, like the Library of Congress and the National Constitution Center, that provide resources, programming ideas, links to other organizations, and text from historic documents
- links to a sampling of other colleges/universities so that you can see the range of innovative programming and activities being offered

As always, we welcome your contributions. Please keep us informed of the Constitution related programming on your campus this fall. Send us links and a description and we'll add your institution to our resources.