

Documentarian Ken Burns to hold film discussion

By Amanda Beland

Arts Editor

Published: Friday, February 4, 2011

Updated: Friday, February 4, 2011 00:02

On Feb. 11, New Hampshire born documentarian Ken Burns will speak to the university community as a part of UNH's Distinguished Speakers Series.

"He is a big friend of the University and someone who has spoken here before," said Susan Entz, director of University Events and Programs.

The event will begin at 11 a.m. with a short montage of Burns' past work before the audience will be witness to a rarely seen clip from Burn's new film, Prohibition, which tells the story of America's attempt to control alcohol consumption through the use of the 18th Amendment. The event will end with an open question and answer session with the audience.

So far, according to Entz, 300 people have RSVPed for the lecture, but she and University Events are expecting many more. Invitations were sent out through the university and the Durham community, including film classes. The event is free and open to all who want to attend.

"People are still welcome to attend because there is plenty of room," Entz said.

Burns has been filming and editing documentaries for over 20 years, some of his more famous including The Civil War and The Statue of Liberty.

The event is open to everyone, but interested participants must RSVP at www.unh.edu/universityevents.

On Feb. 11, New Hampshire born documentarian Ken Burns will speak to the university community as a part of UNH's Distinguished Speakers Series.

"He is a big friend of the University and someone who has spoken here before," said Susan Entz, director of University Events and Programs.

The event will begin at 11 a.m. with a short montage of Burns' past work before the audience will be witness to a rarely seen clip from Burn's new film, Prohibition, which tells the story of America's attempt to control alcohol consumption through the use of the 18th Amendment. The event will end with an open question and answer session with the audience.

So far, according to Entz, 300 people have RSVPed for the lecture, but she and University Events are expecting many more. Invitations were sent out through the university and the Durham community, including film classes. The event is free and open to all who want to attend.

"People are still welcome to attend because there is plenty of room," Entz said.

Burns has been filming and editing documentaries for over 20 years, some of his more famous including The Civil War and The Statue of Liberty.

The event is open to everyone, but interested participants must RSVP at www.unh.edu/universityevents.

courtesy