9 Study Tips (backed by science)

1. Shorter Study Sessions

   We learn better in short, regular sessions rather than setting aside an entire day to try to master something. 20-30 minutes a few times a week is ideal.

2. Make a Routine

   Shorter sessions should be routine; it doesn’t matter if it’s one session or three, the routine aspect is what the brain responds to.

3. Flashcards

   Rather than highlighting text, use flashcards. They are perfect for short study sessions and help students identify the most important information.

4. Have a Goal

   Plan study sessions. Decide exactly what you are going to study and focus on that single concept, theory, or subject area.

5. Keep Teaching in Mind

   Studying a subject with the goal of being able to teach it to a class usually results in better performance than those who study specifically for a test.

   This encourages our brain to reorganize information in a coherent structure and as a result, we understand the concept better, and are more likely to retain it.

6. Practice!

   Research shows that practice papers increase confidence, and they highlight areas that students may be lacking in knowledge.

7. Use a Study Space

   Students perform better when they have a designated study area. This helps to focus revision, and can reduce distractions.

8. Bach Over Britney

   Many people swear by using music during a revision session. Studies have suggested the only genre of music that actually aids learning is classical music.

   Supposedly, other genres can prevent our brains from processing information, particularly in the case of more rhythmic music.

9. And Distractions...

   Distraction-free study sessions are the most productive. Put your phone away, turn the TV off, and make sure family members know you’re busy.
