It’s been widely reported that the current administration in Washington is attempting to dismantle environmental protection in the US, through a calculated effort to dismantle EPA. It has also been deleting public data, especially, but not exclusively, about climate change. This isn’t new. Indeed, public skepticism and denial of climate change has been promoted by politically conservative scientists since the 1980s. In this talk, Dr. Conway will outline the history of this effort to promote doubt about climate science. But this conservative war on the particular science of climate has also been turning Americans against science itself. Dr. Conway will connect these two threads of the story to the current effort to defund federal science.